Alex is a member of the Casualty Department concentrating his practice on premises liability, fraud/SIU, and personal injury defense on behalf of insurance carriers and businesses across Florida. His practice encompasses a wide range of complex casualty matters, including high-exposure premises liability, negligent security, and automotive and trucking accidents. In addition to his primary focus on personal injury defense, Alex has extensive experience serving as coverage counsel, conducting thorough pre-suit investigations, performing Examinations Under Oath (EUOs), and authoring detailed coverage opinions for insurance carriers.

Prior to joining Marshall Dennehey, Alex gained unique perspective on personal injury litigation by starting his career at a major Florida plaintiff firm. He subsequently transitioned to defense, spending five years managing a high-volume litigation caseload, arguing complex pre-trial motions, and providing strategic claim evaluations.

Alex earned his bachelor's degree in political science from the University of Central Florida and his juris doctor from Nova Southeastern University Shepard Broad College of Law. Away from the office, he enjoys spending time with his wife, Alexa, his son, Ryan, and their dogs, Ryder and Lincoln.
